

Title	Time for SerendipiTEA: a randomised coffee trial Between Mercy University Hospital and St. Michael's Unit
Authors	Breen, Paul;Cotter, Liis
Publication date	2025-06-25
Original Citation	Breen, P. and Cotter, L. (2025) 'Time for SerendipiTEA: a randomised coffee trial Between Mercy University Hospital and St. Michael's Unit', Mercy University Hospital Clinical Audit & Quality Improvement Day, Cork, Ireland, 26 June.
Type of publication	Conference item
Rights	© 2025, the Authors.
Download date	2026-08-25 15:49:33
Item downloaded from	https://hdl.handle.net/10468/17829

FSS an Iardheiscirt
HSE South West

Time for SerendipiTEA

What is it?

SerendipiTEA is a randomised coffee trial. Through this initiative, staff from MUH and St. Michael's unit can volunteer to be paired with another staff member. When paired, they can arrange to meet and talk about their work, or anything else they would like to discuss — perhaps over a nice cup of tea or coffee.

How is it going?

SerendipiTEA was run for the first time in March 2025 and was a great success. 14 staff members from a wide variety of departments and levels participated, all of those who submitted feedback reported having a positive experience. Initiatives like this have been run regularly in the UK by the NHS, which has found that "randomised coffee trials help build relationships, improve communication, encourage collaboration and share knowledge and ideas".

What did participants think?

"I enjoyed meeting with a colleague from MUH. I found it interesting to learn about their role, particularly as it is so different to mine. It gave me insight into an area of the health service that I have not worked with directly. SerendipiTEA is an excellent way to network."

"I really enjoyed it. It pushed me outside my comfort zone. I was very energised after it, it gave me a greater appreciation of not only other services but my own also."

"I will encourage staff in my department and my peers to engage with SerendipiTEA if it is rolled out again."